LECTURE

Gérôme Then and Now

Mary Morton and Scott Allan, co-curators of the exhibition The Spectacular Art of Jean-Léon Gérôme, discuss the controversial reception of Gérôme's art in the 19th century, its neglect in the 20th century, and the importance of revisiting his art today.

Gérôme's Cinematic Imagination

Marc Gotlieb, director of the graduate program in the history of art at Williams College, introduces Jean-Léon Gérôme's paintings through the lens of modern cinema. This perspective—characterized by Hollywood and its approach to storytelling and suspense—brings to life pictures that once captivated the attention of audiences across Europe and the United States, even as those pictures were anathema to Modernist aesthetics.

Reconsidering Gérôme

Edited by Scott Allan and Mary Morton

The essays written for this volume examine the work of Jean-Léon Gérôme (1824-1904) in light of a renewed interest in the artist. Because of the shifting popular and critical tastes that followed the emergence of Impressionism and Modernism, art historians tended to bypass his work for much of the twentieth century. The essays published here reflect a variety of fresh new perspectives as well as a critical counterpoint to standard textbook treatments of Gérôme's career.
